Today's post is about the High Elf special unit the White Lions. I got 20 of these as part of my High Elf army deal and was looking forward to getting them into play. After all, great weapons striking first then rerolling misses is great even without the psychology rules. I must admit I was less thrilled about them once I got building.

Posts about High Elves written by Wudugast. Until now I've never painted a high elf. It's not something I'm famous for per se, people don't point me out in the street, nudging their friends and saying "there goes the man who's never painted a high elf" but it is something I spoken about in the past, usually in connection with my typically dirty, grimy painting style.

High Elves tend to be more introverted and spend time cultivating hindsight, intuition, insight, psychic abilities all to help themselves understand more about the world. I am happy to bring in the wisdom of Elrond, Arwen, Galadriel, and many others who were ancient souls who remained on Middle Earth to help others.

The high elves had their turn which proved to be pretty ineffective. I think I lost the warfire thrower to a lucky magic missile. My second turn all of my skirmishers moved further into the wood, my main units on the right flank moved up and I rolled 2 lucky 4's to get both my tunnelling teams onto the bolt throwers.

High-elven just as there is High German, and as a convenient shorthand he called its speakers High Elves. So we should imagine High Elves as wearing Lederhosn, eating Brezn and playing the Alphorn?. I think it's possible that "High Elves" wasn't originally intended to indicate some sort of superiority, but that it developed that connotation nearly inevitably - it fits in too well ...

High Elves have been one of my favorite armies since starting this hobby, years and years and years ago. After all this time though, my army lists followed 2 paths, either heavy magic with a line of archers and repeater bolt throwers, then some eagles for march blocking.

Okay, first off, I love the idea of High Elves as an Alliance Allied Race. I would have been thrilled if Blizzard had done that. But they didn't, and I'm not getting the sense that Allied Races are going to be a big feature of the game going forward — it was added for Battle for Azeroth, got some late options for Legion that existed to bridge the gap between expansions, and it definitely ...
