I am happy that the Translation Seminar is still going strong. I started it, informally, in the spring term of 1978. With a group of people interested in literary translation would gather every Friday to present and discuss translations.

Cambridge Scholars Publishing is pleased to invite translation scholars and researchers worldwide to contribute research papers to an edited volume, provisionally titled Reframing Realities through Translation. The volume will encompass a wide range of topics, including but not limited to:

- The role of translation in shaping cultural identities
- The influence of translation on literature and culture
- Translation as a means of resistance and subversion
- The ethics of translation and the responsibilities of translators
- The impact of translation on the meaning and reception of literary works
- The relationship between translation and cultural theory
- Translation as a means of promoting cultural exchange and understanding

This volume is an opportunity to contribute to ongoing debates and research in the field of translation studies. Authors are invited to submit proposals for chapters, with a focus on interdisciplinary approaches and methodologies. Contributions are expected to be scholarly essays, with a clear argument or analysis, and to be suitable for a book-length format.

Proposals should include a short abstract (250-300 words) outlining the main ideas and arguments of the proposed chapter. These should be submitted by [please provide date] to the editor at [please provide email address]. The selection process will be based on the relevance and originality of the proposed ideas, as well as the potential contribution of the chapter to the overall theme of the volume.

We look forward to receiving your proposals and to working with you to produce a valuable and informative resource on the subject of Reframing Realities through Translation.

Best regards,
