Oh, yes. The honey badger. Quite the reputation, thanks to the popularized YouTube video of a honey badger in its natural habitat, doin' its thang. And as Christians, we should be doin' our thang, too. I'm not saying be a honey badger in a "viciously attack and bite the heads off of your enemies and eat them for dinner" kind of way.

Good question Anni. Here's my view on this issue. If the question is for previously sold Honey Badgers, then the article outlines what one should do while the company takes up their disagreement on this subject with the ATF. They are: 1) take the upper of the Honey Badger and put it on another "Legal" braced pistol that the buyer owns.

The adder and the Ratel fight, and the Honey Badger kills the viper, but not before being bitten in the face and pumped full of enough venom to kill a creature three times its size. The Badger succumbs to the poison, falls unconscious, but then – amazingly – somehow comes back to life and continues devouring the already-half-eaten snake.

My other dog[Rottweiler, 5yrs] is trained perfectly, so were my previous five dogs. She[Rottweiler] is what you would call advanced level; doesn't need a leash in public, although I still use one. However, this new dog is a canine-honey badger; it doesn't give a shit. I sent her to a highly regarded professional trainer for three weeks.
